A retrospective review of the two-visit protocol, that is, immediate placement of a retrograde wire and occlusion balloon, versus single-session retrograde wire placement, in coronary stenting: mid-term outcome in 12 patients with chronic total occlusion. Retrograde wire placement via the aorto-iliac or femoral arterial system is a key technique for endovascular treatment of coronary chronic total occlusions (CTOs). The aim of this study was to compare a two-visit retrograde wire and balloon/occlusion (2-V-R-W/O) protocol in patients with femoropopliteal disease and a CTO lesion in the inflow tract, with the standard approach of a single-session retrograde wire placement only (1-S-R-W/O). In patients with femoropopliteal CTO, we compared the 2-V-R-W/O group, which included consecutive 12 patients, with the 1-S-R-W/O group, which included consecutive 25 patients. Retrograde wire placement was performed using a snare into the inflow tract via the iliac artery. In the 1-S-R-W/O group, the snare was introduced to the inflow tract and the common femoral artery (CFTA) via the contralateral femoral approach and the femoral approach, respectively. In the 2-V-R-W/O group, all snare introductions were performed via the CFTA. The primary efficacy end points were technical success, clinical success, and angiographic success rates. The secondary efficacy end points were procedure time, fluoroscopy time, and contrast volume used in both approaches. The procedure time (43 ± 17 vs. 59 ± 32 minutes, $p = 0.05$), fluoroscopy time (14 ± 12 vs. $30 \pm$
